Model 16-Day Itinerary for Japan

(Tokyo, Hiroshima, Miyajima, Kurashiki, Okayama, Himeji, Kyoto, Nara, Takayama, Osaka)

This "model" 16-day itinerary is based on over thirty years experience traveling in Japan. As a company and as individuals, our focus is on introducing our clients to the unique history, culture and food of each country in as efficient and appropriate a manner as possible. This itinerary reflects that focus. Our intent here is not to include all the worthy attractions in Japan, but rather to provide you, the potential visitor, with our considered opinion on what attractions we feel are worth seeing given your limited time and budget. Although our clients usually request first-class or deluxe accommodations when they travel with our arrangements, our model itineraries can be used by travelers on almost any budget as the routing and sites are still what most visitors should see. We also offer some alternative suggestions for those with slightly different interests, or with time and/or other travel constraints.

In reality only a few fortunate travelers will be able to spend more than our recommended 16-days in Japan, and many will not be able to spend that much time, but this itinerary will provide the majority of potential travelers a good idea of some of the most memorable and beautiful things there are in Japan and how long it takes to see and do them (the individual city modules are perfectly capable of being used as just that if you are not able to see everything we are recommending.) This is in recognition of the fact that most first-time travelers to a country (and with Asia travel that is the vast majority of North American travelers) underestimate time and distance in their planning.

Our 16-day recommendation is based on a two week trip, departing on a Saturday, and returning on a Sunday two weeks later. This would mean missing only two weeks of work (painful as that absence may be for some) but maximizing the total number of days you can be gone by including the three weekends. Please keep in mind that to get to Asia from North America you have to cross the International Date Line in the Western Pacific. This means that you lose a day going to Asia, but will gain it back when you return. Thus, you can leave on a Saturday morning and arrive in most Asian destinations by Sunday evening (after a flight of 10-20 hours against the jet stream), and can depart an Asian destination for North American on Sunday morning and arrive the same day (after a shorter flight of 8-18 hours with the jet stream). The total trans-Pacific travel time is therefore at least three full days. From these numbers you can see that a shorter trip to Asia would involve a significant amount of the time just traveling and would not be as efficient a use of your time and money.
PRIOR TO DEPARTURE

- Arrange your airline tickets to arrive in Tokyo and depart from Osaka, if at all possible. This will save you a full day of backtracking to Tokyo so it is worth even an extra $100-200 in airfare, if that is necessary.
- Check to be sure you don't need a visa (American and Canadian passport holders currently don't need a visa for Japan for normal tourist length stays).
- Purchase an appropriate Japan Rail Pass before you leave.
- If you plan to drive in Japan, obtain an International Driver's License from the AAA.
- Plan to travel with two medium size suitcases rather than one or more large suitcases.

Day 1 - Home to Japan - Air

(We recommend you begin this itinerary on a Saturday for the maximum stay.) Depart in the morning from the closest airport to your home via air for Tokyo. Cross the International Date Line.

Day 2 – Air to Tokyo (Night 1 of 3)

While on the plane fill out the Japanese Arrival/Departure card the flight attendant should give you.

Arrive in Tokyo at Narita International Airport (Terminal 1 or 2.) Pass through Quarantine (only of concern if you are coming from certain “infected countries”) and Immigration. Once through Immigration you will collect your luggage. Narita airport provides complimentary luggage carts. Proceed through Customs, normally via one of the Green (“Nothing to Declare”) Lanes, and out into the Arrival Hall.

We recommend you do five things before leaving the airport:

1. Change several hundred dollars at the nearest money exchange (rates are pretty similar throughout Japan);
2. Look for the baggage shipping services, normally at one end of the terminal as you exit Customs, and ship one of your two bags to your hotel in Hiroshima for approximately ¥1,200-2,000 (about US$10-20) depending on the weight, size and distance. It will normally arrive the next afternoon unless you arrived in Tokyo fairly late;
3. Take the escalators downstairs to the Japan Rail (JR) office to have your JR Pass validated and to get reserved seat tickets for your various train trips. If you want aisle or window seats you should tell the ticket agent now. Remember to ask for a window seat on the north side on your Tokyo to Hiroshima leg so you can see Mt. Fuji if visible;

4. Purchase your Airport Limousine Bus ticket for approximately ¥3,000 (about US$30) to your specific hotel or the closest hotel to yours; and,

5. If you don't already have maps, brochures and a JR timetable from a Japan National Tourist Organization office in North America pick some up at their information counter.

Go outside to the queue number for your bus for the drive into Tokyo (a minimum of 1 hour but can take 2 hours in rush hour to some hotels.)

Day 3 - Tokyo (Night 2 of 3)

Sightseeing in Tokyo should include the unique Tsukiji Wholesale Fish Market, the nearby Tsukiji Honganji Temple, the Sensoji Temple (in the Asakusa Kannon Temple), a Sumida river boat cruise to the Hamarikyu Garden, and the Ginza area. End with a performance of Kabuki at the Kabukiza Theater in the Ginza (if available.)

Day 4 - Tokyo (Night 3 of 3)

Sightseeing in Tokyo should include the Edo Tokyo Museum, the Kokugikan Sumo Stadium and Museum (unless a Sumo tournament is on, in which case definitely buy a ticket), and either the Meiji Shrine, Harajuku and Omotesando, or the Tokyo National Museum in Ueno. In the evening visit the Mori Tower in Roppongi for the best view of Tokyo.

Day 5 - Tokyo to Hiroshima (Night 1 of 2)
